

New Online Video Helps You Prepare for Required IRB Process (8/27/18)

A new short online video is available to student and faculty researchers to help them understand and get through the Institutional Review Board process at UCF.

The IRB is comprised of a group of interdisciplinary faculty, who are mandated to protect the “rights and welfare of human research subjects.” IRBs are required by law and any researcher, student or faculty member, using human subjects must obtain IRB approval before commencing their research work.

The video tutorial, IRB 101, covers the IRB process at UCF including step-by-step guidance on the software submission process and includes tips on avoiding common mistakes that can delay review and approval of your proposal. The goal is to help you complete the process as efficiently and smoothly as possible.

The College of Graduate Studies and the Office of Research created the video, which is available to anyone at <https://graduate.ucf.edu/online-workshops/>.

For questions about the IRB process email IRB@ucf.edu.